

Finding Out

By EVELYN LEE

(Copyright, 1919, by Western Newspaper Union.)

"You make me laugh!" spoke up Acton Brill, a cousin of Luella Morse. "Why are you going to dig up a dead issue that is shelved?"

"It has been a crying matter to me," answered the young girl seriously. "It worried my father nearly to death; it has been on my mind ever since he died. I do not know what dreadful secret was involved, but while delirious father referred to it. I feel it my duty to look into the matter. He was a good man, was father, as both of us know, but there might have been a misstep, a temptation in the past placing him under the power of an enemy, a blackmail. No, I cannot rest until I know the worst, and I am determined to get the facts concerning this mystery, which certainly darkened my father's life."

"But if your father was unable to free himself from what you believe to be the extortion of a person having some hold upon him, how can you hope to succeed?"

"I have my plan," replied Luella, the spirit of resolve and confidence in her steadfast eyes. "I know the name of the man whom he has visited year after year. I have found some letters he wrote to father. They are terse, sharp, demanding payments mutually agreed on. If I made no move, and even if this Anson Ladd never troubled us again, I should be living under a constant dread. Seemingly I shall go to the city and earn my own living, but all I am thinking of is probing the mystery of father's dealings with Anson Ladd, lawyer, Brooks building, Springfield."

So Luella Morse left her pretty native town with no confidante as to her real purpose except Acton Brill, whom she knew she could trust. She was a sensible girl, and lovely, too, and she found board and lodging with a respectable old lady just on the edge of the business section of the city. Then she located the office of Anson Ladd. Several times she passed its door, reading his name upon its panels. She found its sole occupant to be a young man whom she took for a clerk. Then she summoned her courage to attempt the plan she had formed in her mind.

"Can I see Mr. Anson Ladd?" she inquired, being now near enough to the supposed clerk to observe that he was a very handsome and pleasant-faced young man.

"I am his son, Robert Ladd," came the explanation. "My father died several weeks since. Did you have some business with him?"

"Why, not exactly," answered Luella. "I had heard of him and wondered if he needed my help in the office. But of course—"

"What can you do?" inquired young Mr. Ladd, with a token of friendly interest in his face.

"I understand the typewriter and can take some dictation," said Luella.

The young man seemed to ponder. He asked her name. She gave it as Verona Tresham, feeling the deception excusable.

"Tell you, Miss Tresham," spoke Robert Ladd, after a pause, "there is not much to do here, but I was thinking of advertising for some one to take charge of the office when I am away and type a few letters occasionally. You see, about all I have had to do was to go over my father's papers, and sort them out and clean up a lot of useless rubbish. What's left is in his old desk yonder," and Luella's eyes glowed as they rested on the battered old receptacle pointed out by the speaker. "My father owned a great deal of city property and my main employment is looking after mortgages and rents."

Luella felt that providence was indeed helping her as she left the Ladd office, engaged to report for work the next morning at a reasonably good salary. The dead man's papers! In that desk. Had the son discovered the possible one covering the dealings of the old lawyer with her father?

Ever these thoughts were in her mind during the rest of that week. A natural impetuosity influenced her to set at work at once to investigate that old desk, but it was locked, and she knew that she must use caution.

The next morning Mr. Ladd announced that he would not be at the office the next day. The first thing the following morning Luella set about investigating the old desk. She worked at its lock with a wire until she had it opened. She was exploring document after document when Mr. Ladd entered the office.

"Why, Miss Tresham, what is this?" he inquired bewildered.

Luella stood aghast. Then her usual composure deserted her. She felt guilty and helpless under the gaze of her employer. She burst into tears and told her whole story.

"Samuel Morse?" he repeated the name after her. "Why, I destroyed the papers in that matter a month ago. You poor, faithful, but mistaken child. Your father did indeed pay money to my father, but it was to protect the memory and family of a dear friend who sold my father a forged note."

The reaction from the tense strain of fear was too much for Luella. She tottered and Robert Ladd caught her in his arms, and then and there pity, tenderness, real interest, surged up in his soul as he told her how he loved her.

WOULD REMAIN 'UNDER COVER'

Sergeant Had His Reasons for Not Making at That Time a "Full and Free Confession."

An American colonel in France was having difficulty with his wife. It was the headquarters safe. Its lock had jammed, and none of his staff could open it. While they were struggling with it a negro sergeant came up to them apologetically.

"Cul'n'l," he said, "if I ain't intrudin' into dis head difficulty, I believes, sah, dat I might he'p yah."

"Yes?" said the colonel. "What do you suggest?"

"Cul'n'l," said the sergeant, "I suggests Co'p'l Hall."

"Corporal Hall? Why Corporal Hall?"

"Co'p'l Hall," the sergeant explained, under his voice, "was fo' foah years a bugglah."

They sent for Corporal Hall and Corporal Hall opened the safe.

"Well, sergeant," the colonel said, "I'm glad to know about Corporal Hall. I wish I'd known it sooner. It would have saved us a lot of time with that safe. And tell me, sergeant—in case we may need to call on you some day—in what direction do your particular talents lie?"

"Cul'n'l," the sergeant answered, "Ah don' want to tell no lies. Stand in' as Ah does daily in de presence of mah Ma'keh, mos' doubtless Ah don' want to tell no lies. But if de time comes when Ah kin he'p yah, sah, Ah'll make a full an' free confession, a full an' free confession, sah."—Ben B. Lindsey in the Cosmopolitan Magazine.

DEATH OF A FAMOUS DUCK

Peggy of Rouen, N. J., Laid 325 Eggs in a Single Year, and Was Easily World's Champion.

The death of Peggy, the famous duck of Rouen, New Jersey, comes as a reminder to us that, we would do well to follow the principles which guided the life of this excellent bird. Peggy was celebrated in two hemispheres as the champion egg-layer of the world, the New York Evening Post states. Peggy, in one year laid as many as 325 eggs. Yet, celebrated as she was, noted wherever eggs were laid or scrambled, head of her glorious profession, what was her attitude after we entered the war? Did she rush into print, airing her opinion as to what the president ought to do? Not at all. Despite numerous tempting offers from fowl fashions and other magazines, she refrained from utterance and continued contributing her daily drop to national victory. Even when the Germans opened their recent peace drive Peggy did not turn hysterical and demand that they at once surrender all the Strassburg geese. She, still in silence, went on with her lay. It is related of her that on the morning of her demise she quietly produced an egg, and, indicating her satisfaction with a feeble quack, keeled over and expired.

Tanks Like a Deck of Cards.

In the open stretch, beyond the last fringe of wood, we struck the field where the American tanks attacked the Huns on flank and rear and finished the battle of Argonne wood. Elizabeth Frazer writes in the Saturday Evening Post. Later we saw a complete outfit of these grotesque monsters go wallowing across a shell-ton field. Their insignia were the characters on a deck of cards, and they always followed suit. Thus an ace of spades was always followed by the king of spades, the king by his spouse; and so on down to the tray. As we passed, the knave of hearts thrust forth a grinning face from his round armored little turret and waved a grimy paw. Close on his tail wagged the red-tailed ten spot. It was like some mad scene in "Alice in Wonderland."

Grim Jest Pathetic.

Was Poe's tale "The Masque of the Red Death" prophetic? His story was that on the stroke of midnight a tall, red-gowned figure revealed itself amid revelers as Death by Plague.

A counterpart from real life is reported from Cowestry, Wales. It is the report of a masquerade ball, at which one of the masked celebrators simulated Death, in a black robe and with hollow eye-sockets.

There were 140 dancers at the ball. Of this number, 122 are now suffering from influenza. Twelve are already dead, including the death masker.

Italy's Exports.

Italian motor car exports showed a falling off for the first six months of 1918, compared with the corresponding period of the two preceding years. From January 1 to June 30, 1918, a total of 2,356 lorries and touring cars were exported, having a value of approximately £1,400,000, compared with 4,148 vehicles in 1917 and 2,731 in 1916. The number of touring cars exported during the first six months of 1918 was 728, this constituting a record, for the figures of the two preceding years were 244 and 568, respectively.

It's True in Terre Haute.

The other day a primary teacher in the Terre Haute schools was teaching her youngsters about animals. She had told them about domestic animals and then gave examples of the cow and the pig. Then she turned to the children. "Can't some little boy name some wild animals?" she asked.

"John could. He rose with alacrity. 'Ghosts and Indians!' he shouted.

An Enraptured Sextette

By GEORGE ELMER COBB

(Copyright, 1919, by Western Newspaper Union.)

"What's this—fire!" exclaimed Lawyer Ira Tarbell, arising hastily from his desk and starting for the open doorway of his office. His two clients, Mark and Paul Elston, brothers, hastily came to their feet and joined him in the hall without. It was filled with smoke and there was an uproar of alarmed voices in other rooms and corridors, but it was soon discovered that the smoke came through an open window from the rear yard, where a lot of rubbish was being burned up.

Now when Mark and Paul had arisen from their seats each had left open on the table his wallet. They had been consulting their contents while talking with the lawyer. Returning, each closed a wallet and restored it to a pocket. The attorney resumed his wonted dignity and calm. "Well, gentlemen," he said, referring to a penciled sheet before him, "I think I understand the situation. I am to make over to your sister Miss Naomi, the old family homestead and ten thousand dollars in bonds, to be held in her own right as a femme sole."

"That's right," nodded Mark Elston, ruddy-cheeked, bright-eyed as a school-boy.

"And Naomi shall do just what she wants to with the property and money," said Mark heartily.

The brothers were under thirty, their sister Naomi an agreeable spinster of thirty-five. When their parents died she had taken charge of their home and had well filled the bill as housekeeper and cook. So comfortably she looked after her brothers, so smoothly did things run on that the pleasant routine was continued permanently and unconsciously all hands settled into a rut. Naomi was only happy when she was doing something to add to the welfare and comfort of her brothers, and they accepted her kind service as a matter of course, although truly appreciative and grateful. Recently Paul had observed to Mark that he fancied Naomi looked tired and dull at times. They talked it over. Maybe she needed a rest, a change. Suppose they parceled out to her what she was entitled to of the estate—made her independent, in fact? Certainly that would make her feel better. Hence the visit to the lawyer's office, and the brothers went home feeling they had well consummated an act of willing duty.

Naomi broke down and cried like a child when they told her what they had done. The way the imaginative Mark pictured the transition awaiting her! She was to be promoted from a serfdom to the lot of a princess! Naomi was so overcome at their generosity and thoughtfulness, as she chose to magnify it, that she fled to her room to have her cry out. Mark followed her to the hall to console her and Paul, chancing to take out his wallet, made a startling discovery.

"Why, we've changed wallets at the lawyer's office!" he exclaimed. "This belongs to Mark. Hello! hello! hello!"

Paul stared and then grinned. In an apartment of his brother's wallet he found a time-worn photograph. In an instant he recognized it.

"Did you ever?" he chuckled. "Bertha Drake!" and just then Mark reentered the room holding the other wallet in his hand, and Paul flushed like a conscious schoolboy as he noticed revealed within it his own photograph—Wanda Drake!

"H'm!" observed Mark with a flush, "both in the same boat, eh? Well, it's nothing to be ashamed of. They were nice girls, Bertha and Wanda. There was the brother Wilbur, too. Always thought he had a sneaking fondness for Naomi. What grand days those were, back in Lacon, when the Drakes were our next-door neighbors! Why, it must be two years since we all met and drifted apart."

"I don't want money to waste," said their sister later in the evening. "I would like to fix up things a little around the house, though, and have a break in the loneliness by entertaining some of our old friends once in a while."

"Yes, there's the Drakes," reminded Mark, evading his brother's eyes.

"Bertha and Wanda," nodded Paul in well-assumed generality. "And Wilbur," and Naomi flushed, hurriedly referred to other old acquaintances and a start was thus made along the road of yesterday.

How did it all come about? When the old neighborhood companionship was resumed Mark took great credit to himself for suggesting the visit to the lawyer's office, which had brought about such a happy suggestion. Paul drifted back to his old liking for Wanda Drake with an ardor that spurred Paul out of all laggardness. As to Naomi, she was a blushing, sensitive young girl once more as the visits of Wilbur Drake became as constant and interesting as of yore.

The cozy sitting room of the Elston home became a real confessional one auspicious evening. With marked constraint and then a genuine bubbling of emotion the two brothers and their sister with some circumlocution announced the result of the reunion of the two families. And at the triple wedding joy, big-hearted Paul Elston took great pride in assuming for himself the credit for having solved the problem of all-around happiness for the contented sextette.

Notice to Non-Resident Defendants

Jessie Wilcox, nee Crocker, Ralph Wilcox, her husband, Richard Crocker, Mrs. Richard Crocker, his wife, real name unknown, Mary Crocker, single, and Paul Crocker, single, defendants, take notice that on the 4th day of April, 1919, G. J. Stewart, plaintiff, in an action wherein the said G. J. Stewart is plaintiff, and you and each of you are defendants, filed his petition in the District Court of Lincoln County, Nebraska, against said defendants and each of you, the object and prayer of plaintiff's petition is to quiet his title to the NE 1/4 of Section 12, Township 10, Range 32, Lincoln County, Nebraska. The plaintiff alleges in his petition that the defendants claim some right to said real estate, and that the said real estate is the property of the heirs of F. R. Crocker, deceased, and by virtue of the fact that the said F. R. Crocker at one time held a mortgage upon said real estate, he also at one time had a conveyance by quit-claim deed to said real estate.

Plaintiff further alleges that the indebtedness secured by said mortgage has been paid and that any cause of action thereon is barred by the Statute of Limitations of the State of Nebraska; that plaintiff has been in the open and adverse possession of said land for more than ten years last past, and that the defendants and each of them to this action have been in the open interest in and to said real estate. Plaintiff asks that his title be quieted against the claims of all the defendants in this action.

You are further notified that you are required to answer said petition on or before the 19th day of May, 1919, or judgment will be rendered against you. Dated this 4th day of April, 1919.
